Virus Outbreak: No lockdown needed in Taiwan: Chen

'BE CAUTIOUS': It is too early to discuss a lockdown in the nation, the minister of health said, adding that efforts should focus on enhancing disease prevention

On April 4, Taiwan rolled out social distancing measures and on top of that, implemented a fine from NT$3,000 to NT$15,000 on people who do not wear masks while on public transport.

Taiwanese government used digital governance approach to successfully identify the majority of its confirmed cases

- Taiwan banned people from Hubei province from entering Taiwan starting from 26 January
- On 5 February, Taiwan closed its borders and prohibited mainland Chinese tourists from entering
- Taiwan was one of the earliest countries to implement these policies.

A lack of trust in China

- In 2003, Taiwan had negative experience with the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) during the SARS epidemic
- The information provided by the CCP about the current coronavirus outbreak was not taken as fact
- The Taiwanese government had more autonomy to make decisions and find the most appropriate strategy

Face masks and strict quarantine policies

- are two vital elements of Taiwan's coronavirus response model
- The 2003 SARS outbreak led Taiwanese people to believe that wearing a face mask was an easy and practical way to protect themselves in case of a pandemic and in daily life
- Taiwan was the first country to announce a face mask export ban policy on 24 January, but the masks only cover 10% of national usage.
- the Taiwanese government collaborated with over 30 Taiwanese private face mask production companies and machine tool companies to create 60 new production lines
- Until mid-March, Taiwan could produce 10 million face mask per day, meaning that each of its 23 million residents could get a face mask every two days

Coronavirus: Taiwan fines man US$33,000 for breaking quarantine rule

Face masks and strict quarantine policies

- Participation at the local level is key to the success of quarantine policies
- Local village chiefs call every day to ensure that those who are in quarantine are really staying at home.
- The chiefs also deliver food to quarantined people.

Scientific evidence-based decision-making and winning over public confidence and support

- Taiwanese President Tsai Ing-wen assigned the Minister of Health and Welfare the role of Chief Commander and asked him to organise a professional committee, which included doctors and experts in epidemiology, to manage disease prevention
- The Chief Commander and the committee now hold a media press conference every afternoon to announce pandemic updates.
- But most politicians — including Tsai — have taken a backseat and do not have overall responsibility for these processes.
- The Taiwanese government respects the information provided by medical professionals and their decisions, allowing it to gain public confidence in its COVID-19 response policies.

Control the spread of COVID-19 via public transportation

- on 1 April the Taiwanese government banned passengers with body temperatures exceeding 37.5 degrees Celcius from taking public transportation
- All Taiwanese flight attendants must also wear full protective gear and passengers are prohibited from changing their seats without permission.

- President Tsai Ing-Wen pointed out: “a combination of efforts by medical professionals, government, private sector and society at large have armored our country's defenses.”
- “The government isn't made of plastic, and laws aren't made to be ignored. To maintain everyone's health, I'm asking everyone to cooperate with the government's virus containment measures,” said Premier Su Tseng-chang
- “It is truly inspiring how a small nation like Taiwan is dealing with the pandemic very effectively. There is no panic or any rule-breaking incidences. If you deal with a problem systematically, preemptively and calmly, it is not a problem anymore”
(Indian researcher in Taipei)
